

Congratulations On Your Convocation, Teddy

First of all — BIG congratulations, Dora. First-class graduate?? You really said, “let me clear this thing with style.” I’m genuinely proud of you. All those nights, all the stress, all the silent pressure, it paid off. You deserve every single clap, picture, and “well done” coming your way today.

You’ve lived a really beautiful life; amidst all the struggles, pain, and joy, you’ve managed to stay on top. In the short months of our relationship, you’ve been a beautiful soul and a beautiful addition to my life. I truly hope the universe aligns in your favour, always.

This convocation isn’t just about a certificate; it’s proof of your discipline, resilience, and brilliance. First class is not beans, you earned it. I hope this next chapter brings you more ease, more joy, and more opportunities than stress. I hope life opens doors that match both your effort and your heart. You deserve all the good that’s coming, and trust me, plenty good dey your front.

You’ve faced challenges, highs and lows, and through it all, you’ve remained strong. But this is what I wish for you: that the time comes when you don’t always have to be strong. I hope life allows you real rest, the kind where you can breathe, laugh freely, and truly enjoy yourself. Maybe sitting back on a beach somewhere on a private island, sipping a fine cocktail as the sun sets on the horizon.

Teddy, you are such a special soul, warm, thoughtful, and full of light. You reminded me that there are still genuinely good people out there. Your kindness, your wisdom, and your steady support don’t go unnoticed. You are a beautiful soul, and I’m deeply grateful for the gift of you.

I’m also grateful for whatever forces brought our paths together, even if you’re always reminding me that I’m from Oyo, schooling in Ogbomosho, and everything Oyo, abeg. Somehow, life still said, “yeah, these two should know each other,” and I’m thankful for that. I can't imagine my life without you in it, and I hope the years ahead give me even more chances to show you how much you mean to me.

As you step into life after school, I wish you clarity, courage, and confidence. May your dreams align with the right opportunities, and may your hard work continue to speak loudly for you. Go and conquer the world, First-Class Babe — gently, but firmly.

That's enough from me sha. Enjoy your day, bask in your flowers, and take all the pictures. This is your moment. I'm proud of you, always. Stay growing in wisdom and in grace.

Congratulations once again, Teddy

— Batman